

The Power of Positive Affirmations for Success & Happiness

Includes 365 Days of Positive Affirmations to Transform Your Life

You've done it. I've done it. In fact, everyone has done this at some point. Do you remember the woman wearing the business suit, who walked into the store with such an air of confidence that you were sure she must be the owner? At the time, you thought, "I wish I could be that successful and confident."

Then, there was the time you saw the man at the park, with a bunch of kids. They were all laughing, playing, having a great time, and enjoying life to its fullest. As you watched, you smiled and thought, "I wish I could be that happy and carefree."

Unfortunately, wishing won't make you more successful or any happier. However, you don't have to spend the rest of your life on the outside, looking in. Whether you want to be more successful, happier, or any of a million other things, you can change your status quo and your life, with the help of powerful, positive affirmations.

Unless your life is perfect, it is possible for you to have greater success and more happiness. In fact, you have infinite possibilities in your life. Right now, your happiness and success "possibilities" are just sitting there...waiting.

Are you tired of waiting? Are you ready to make your vision a reality? I hope so because in this report, you'll learn how to develop your big picture, set the stage for success, turn your possibilities into probabilities, and transform your goals into rewarding realities, using the power of positive affirmations. Get ready! Here we go....

Uncovering the Big Picture Details

Before you jump into using positive affirmations, look at your big picture to uncover the details about what you have, what you want, and what needs to change in order to achieve your goals. There are a few questions below to help you get started. After you picture what you want to change, in your mind, answer the questions aloud, or write them down, for future reference. You will probably need to refer back to them.

Envision every area of your life filled with more success. What do you see? What area or part of your life came to mind first? How does it feel? What is different? Is it truly possible to be more successful? Now, do the same thing for happiness. Picture every area of your life filled with more happiness. What does it look like? What area came to your mind first? How does it feel? What changed? Is it truly possible for you to be happier?

The ability to envision what you want to achieve and change is very important. The more often you do it, the easier it becomes. As this happens, you'll begin adding more details each time you envision your "new life." The more detailed your vision is, the more likely you are to achieve the results you want. Did you fudge and skip over the imagery part above? If so, do it now.

I mentioned that your possibilities are waiting. But what are they waiting for? They are waiting for you to make meaningful changes to reach your goals. You've heard "If you keep doing the same old things, you'll keep getting the same old results." Well, that's your call to action.

To make changes, you need to do four things. First, picture how your life will change when you achieve your goals. Envision this frequently to get the clearest picture and the most details. Chalk-up a success for yourself each time you imagine this “coming soon” place and time.

Setting the Stage for Success

Now that you have a picture of your success in your mind, the second thing you’ll need to do is believe that change is possible. Before you can gain more happiness or anything else, you must believe that it is possible for you to make meaningful changes to yourself and your situation.

Even if you have a few doubts, that’s okay. You will learn, make adjustments, and gain confidence as you go. The more firmly you believe something is do-able, the more likely you are to keep trying until you reach your goal. Note I didn’t say that achieving your goal is probable...yet.

Turning Possibilities into Probabilities

To increase the probability of reaching your ultimate goal, you need a well-thought-out action plan. The plan should include a variety of carefully selected tools, resources, strategies, and goals. When you enhance your goals or “best possibilities” by creating and following a SMART plan, you increase your chances of making changes stick and living the life you envisioned.

Your third task is to create SMART goals and a plan, if you don’t have one. Otherwise, look at your existing goals and strategies, as they relate to your new vision. Do they support the “new” vision? Do they include the changes you want/need to make?

Have you broken complex goals down into smaller, do-able goals? Are the goals prioritized by importance or sequenced accordingly? Are your goals SMART – Specific, Measurable, Achievable, Relative, and Time-based? If your current goals do not support your new vision, you will need to write new goals or, at the very least, adjust your goals and your plan to incorporate new needs and strategies.

While many techniques and tools can help you achieve more success and happiness, positive affirmations are at the top of the “best tools” list. Let’s explore affirmation basics now.

Affirmation/Statement Types

Essentially, affirmations are statements said with confidence about a perceived truth. In this report, the terms affirmations and statements are often interchangeable. However, when referring to the positive statements used to help you make changes, the term “affirmation(s)” is used/preferred.

Affirmations can be either negative or positive. Let’s begin with negative statements and affirmations first, because they may block or limit your successes, without you even realizing it. The more you understand about negative statements, the easier it will be to identify, counteract, and overcome them with positive belief statements or affirmations, and other tools.

Negative Statements

You have experienced positive and negative affirmations. But you may vividly remember a negative statement that hurt your feelings or made you feel bad about yourself. This is the case with most negative statements. They tend to include negative words such as don't, won't, am not, can't, shouldn't, and never, among others.

With a negative statement, you probably feel a strong emotion such as fear, anger, pain, sadness, worthlessness, etc. Even when a statement is inaccurate or untrue, a part of you still remembers how it made/makes you feel and automatically accepts the statement as being true or possible, on some level.

Because strong emotions are linked to negative statements, the memories and effects are likely to stick with you and nullify or override positive statements. As an adult, you may discover that negative statements, made during your childhood, still affect how you see yourself and others.

Positive Statements

No matter what part of your life you want to change, positive affirmations can help you achieve your goals. However, there are no quick fixes, so don't expect any. Changing your thoughts, beliefs, habits, and parts of your life take time. If something is deeply engrained, it may take longer and more effort to achieve your goal. But, positive affirmations can support and enhance your progress from the first day by helping you...

- Develop a positive outlook,
- Broaden your opportunities,
- Counteract negative statements,
- Focus on and achieve healthy goals,
- Increase your confidence,
- See yourself as a beautiful person,
- Change unhealthy behaviors,
- Take control of your life,
- Respect and love yourself,
- Modify your thought patterns,
- Persevere to make progress,
- Motivate yourself to take action, and so much more.

Affirmation Sources

Affirmations come from two main sources – other people and yourself. If you grew up with negativity in your home or around critical people, you may still internally hear negative statements leftover from those days. In fact, when you make a mistake now, you may be tempted to repeat the old, familiar, negative affirmation in your self-talk. If that happens, you have the power to overwrite the negative statements with positives and replace the negative feelings with self-love and acceptance.

If you grew up in a home with acceptance and encouragement, or around positive people, you probably heard less negativity. But, no matter how loving or positive people are, blunt, unguarded, and thoughtless words can slip out, hurting and discouraging someone.

While the frequency of negative statements does make a difference in how deeply something is engrained, even one instance can do a great deal of damage. The good news is that the negative effects don't have to last a lifetime or affect people you care about. You can overcome them and heal from the inside out, using the same strategy mentioned earlier – overwriting and replacing.

Affirmation Confirmations

The positive affirmations that you use to make changes and accomplish your goals are simply statements that apply specifically to you and that you believe to be true. Ideally, you design and create your own personalized affirmations based on your needs and goals. These should be carefully worded to help you create change, within yourself.

It's very important that you say what you mean and mean what you say, when it comes to using positive affirmations. If you don't believe a statement is true, don't use it, as-is. The affirmations you choose or create should confirm and/or reaffirm something positive about yourself and/or your situation. This is especially true in the beginning stages or if you have low self-esteem.

If you do have low self-esteem or self-worth, the affirmations are important to your progress. However, what's even more important is your ability to accept and respect yourself enough to be totally honest with yourself about how you feel and what you think. This isn't about saying or doing things that please others. This is about you doing what's needed to become the best person you can be and what it takes to make the changes needed to achieve your goals.

Here are several examples of basic affirmations as well as an altered version to make them believable and acceptable to the user. We'll go into more detail about writing and personalizing your own affirmations a bit later. However, these give you an idea of what affirmations are.

- I am a successful businessperson. – If you don't believe that you are a successful businessperson, state something similar that you do believe such as, "I am learning to build a successful business."
- I am filled with joy and happiness. – If you have difficulty believing this, alter the affirmation to something you believe is true like, "I am happier when I smile frequently."
- My work is very satisfying. – If you don't believe this, try altering it to something similar that you do believe such as, "My work is meaningful to me."

Among the general public, there is some confusion about positive affirmations. In particular, the confusion involves how affirmations should be written or phrased and how to use affirmations to get the most benefit. The next sections will help clarify these misunderstandings.

Writing/Altering Affirmations

Achieving your ultimate goals and making the changes needed depend greatly on your affirmations. It's important that the affirmations are relevant to your goals and support you in achieving and maintaining your success. As you know, your affirmations should be personalized to you and your goals. Here are a few tips to help you write or alter affirmations specifically for your needs and preferences.

- Begin your affirmations with "I" or "My." Using this format puts you, the person talking, in charge of what is being said and it helps hold you accountable for following through.
- Write your affirmations in the present tense using words like am, is, are, etc. Avoid using future and past tense words.
- Don't begin your affirmations with "I want" or "I need."
- Make sure you use positive statements that relate to an aspect of achieving your goal.
- Add power to your affirmations by including positive feelings/emotions such as, "I am excited about meeting interesting people at the conference."
- Create affirmations that you believe are true and do-able. If you don't believe a statement, alter it slightly to include a factor that makes it work for you.
- As you write or alter affirmations, use words and phrases that inspire, motivate, and empower you on a personal level.

Note: While most people have better success using the "I/My" affirmation format, some people feel that the affirmations don't work for them and they give up. Affirmations are definitely not a "one size fits all" solution. Please don't give up. You may simply need to make an adjustment here or there, such as using a different statement format for a while.

Instead of using "I" or "My," phrase your affirmation so it sounds and feels as if a friend or loved one is saying it about you (3rd person.) This can be very helpful since we tend to believe what others say about us more readily than what we say about ourselves.

If the original affirmation is, "I am beautiful." The new 3rd person format might be written as, "Jenny Lynn (use your name) appreciates the classic beauty of her body." Another alternative might be, "I like Jenny Lynn's classic features."

This type of format can help differentiate your "old" patterns from your "new" thoughts and beliefs. In addition, it can help you see things from a different perspective. If you're in the process of dealing with something painful or traumatic, it can help you accept or acknowledge something, while distancing yourself a little from the related negative emotions and/or memories.

Give the affirmations another try. If the 3rd person format helps you, keep using it but include “I/My” affirmations when possible. In other words, work your way up to using the original format; but be gentle with yourself and your needs, as you make progress.

Another affirmation alteration you may want to try, if you’re having trouble, is writing and saying the affirmation as a question, instead of a statement. So, “I am healthy,” might be rephrased as, “Why am I healthy,” or “Why am I getting healthier each day?”

These types of questions give your brain food-for-thought during the day and even while you sleep. Your brain is continually trying to answer questions, solve problems, and make sense of the day’s events. Give your brain something positive to work on. This leaves less room and time for the negatives to sneak in.

While the affirmations themselves are very important, you need to use them effectively to get the most benefits. Let’s look at how to do that now.

Using Affirmations Effectively

One of the top questions people ask is, “How often should I say my affirmations?” The answer varies. The short answer is you should say affirmations at least 3 times a day and as much as you need. Just as you customize affirmation phrasing to meet your needs, customize the frequency and timing, as well.

Another question people ask is, “How quickly will I see results?” This probably isn’t what you want to hear but, realistically, the time frame is different for each person and depends on multiple factors, which are specific to you.

For many people, the emphasis is on the “quick” part. It took a long time for your thought patterns and habits to develop to their current state. If you’re most interested in how fast you can change something, you might need to begin by changing your mindset and priorities.

Focus on making steady progress toward your goal, first and foremost. This is not about how fast you get there, but how long you stay, once you reach your destination. Perseverance and staying power help you achieve and maintain the changes over the long-term. Developing these qualities as you make progress is important to your overall success and happiness.

With that in mind, implementing a few creative techniques, activities, and ideas can add an element of fun, making the entire experience more beneficial. Let’s look at how to use affirmations effectively and have fun as you make breakthrough after breakthrough.

Powerful Practices for Rewarding Results

Sometimes, reaching your goals and making changes stick can be difficult. Using positive affirmations as part of your strategy can play a big part in your success. However, positive affirmations are not a stand-alone solution. Saying or thinking positive words only get you so far.

Consider the person who wants to lose weight. That person might use the positive affirmation, “I am losing weight.” Affirmations are not magic words that make things happen. While there is power in words, the real power is within you – in your thoughts, words, and your actions. It takes all three of these things to reach your realistic goals.

For example, the person who wants to lose weight must do things in addition to saying, “I am losing weight,” such as changing their eating and exercise habits. Achieving your goal requires that you take actions to change, as well as reminding yourself that you can and are making changes. This is where using your positive affirmations effectively comes into play.

You know that you can write your positive affirmations down and use them in your self-talk. But, let’s face it. This can get a little boring after a while and you may find that you aren’t as excited as you once were. To help you stay motivated, interested, positive, and on course, here are a few fun and creative ways to slip affirmations into your daily routines to get an extra dose of inspiration, motivation, determination, etc.

Use as many perceptual learning styles and senses as possible to reinforce your affirmations. Enhancing and varying the ways you use your affirmations, beyond the basics, can add an enormous amount of enjoyment, renewed determination, and a feeling of accomplishment to your experience.

Here are a few ways you can incorporate fun and beneficial activities with your positive affirmations. These are sorted by the learning style or related senses.

Integrate Print (Reading and Writing) with Affirmations

1. Write your affirmations in an app, which sends you a “reminder.”
2. Read a book about the topic of the current affirmation.
3. Write about your affirmation in a journal.
4. Read comedic content related to your affirmation or goal.

Combine Aural (Listening) with Affirmations

1. Have a trusted friend record your 3rd-person affirmations (using your name instead of the “I/My” format.) Listen to this recording when you have self-doubt or need “evidence” that the affirmation is true.
2. Listen to your favorite speaker talk about the topic of your affirmation.
3. Create a song playlist that supports or has a similar message to your affirmations.

Connect Haptic (Touch) with Affirmations

1. Associate a texture/textile with each affirmation. Ex. Security – blanket/yarn
2. Draw or sketch how you envision your affirmation looks. Include yourself in the picture, when appropriate.
3. Put together puzzles that inspire you or remind you of your affirmation/goal.

Couple Verbalization (Talking) with Affirmations

1. Sing your affirmation to a familiar tune, such as “Row, Row, Row Your Boat.”

2. Turn affirmations into a cadence chant or song (military marching song) – Here is a kindergarten cadence chant video example. Adjust to fit your needs.

Tie in Kinesthetic (Body Movement) with Affirmations

1. Use the cadence chant created from your affirmation/goal when riding a bike, walking, jogging, or exercising.
2. Take a walk and look for things that remind you of your affirmation. Write down examples of what you saw and why each reminded you of your affirmation.

Associate Olfactory (Smell or Taste) with Affirmations

1. Make a list of scents or tastes you associate with the related emotion or result in your affirmation/goal. Ex. Lavender – relaxing, Lemon – rejuvenating
2. Incorporate aromatherapy into your day to help you achieve the mindset/emotion associated with your affirmation or goal.

Relate Visuals (Images, Video, Graphs) with Affirmations

1. Create a “vision board” that include images or other visual items to help you “see” or envision your affirmation or your goal.
2. Find or create a visual that represents or depicts your affirmation or related goal.
3. Create a collection of affirmation or goal related images that inspire you. Tag them with the emotions or feelings you experience when you look at them.
4. Take photos of scenes and events that inspire and motivate you.

These are just a few of the many ways that you can make your affirmations more effective, interesting, and fun. As you incorporate your affirmations into more areas of your daily life, you’ll find that additional activity ideas just seem to come to you. So, make sure you have a place to make notes about this and related info. Using a journal would be a great way to keep your information organized.

Your dreams for a better, more successful, and happier life are important. They are within your grasp, when you use positive affirmations, your power tool for achieving goals.
